Deal out all the cards so everyone's got an equal number. The person who dealt the cards starts by asking another player for a card they need to complete a family. If that player has that card, they've got to hand it over, no questions asked.

You may continue asking for cards until you make a mistake. When a mistake is made the player who was asked for his card takes his turn to request cards. They can even snatch back the cards they lost in the previous round. Now, when someone finally collects a family, they have to put those four cards face down on the table in front of them. The player who collects the most sets is declared the ultimate champion!

If you're just playing with one other player, there are some different rules: the dealer deals out 10 cards to each of you and places the rest face down. Usually, the starting player gets to call out a specific card they want. The player must already have one family card. If the other player does not have the card, the first player picks up the top card from the pack and it is then the second player's turn to ask.
